In submitting the present issue of the Triennial Catalogue of the Athenæan Society to its members and friends, the Committee would state, that diligent exertions have been made to render it accurate in every particular; and they indulge the hope that it is as free from errors as the circumstances of the case will allow. No marked changes have been made in the arrangement. Members of the Bar are designated, as heretofore, by the title of Esq., unless entitled to that of Honorable.

The Historical Sketch of the Society, prepared for the last Catalogue by Wm. A. Wheeler, of the Class of 1853, is again inserted in accordance with the wishes of many leading members of the General as well as the Acting Society. Information has been solicited from a large portion of the graduate members, which has in most cases been promptly rendered; and the Committee would return their sincere thanks to all who have thus aided them in their work.

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

In the month of June, 1808, a few individuals associated themselves together for literary purposes, under the name of the "Athenæan Society of Bowdoin College." When it is stated that the College had but recently gone into operation: that the number of students was very limited; and that a similar association was already in existence, it will be seen that the Athenæan was not established under auspices the most encouraging. One thing, however, contributed to its temporary success. The Constitution of the Peucinian,—the rival society,—did not provide for the admission of members till their Sophomore year, and the Athenæan, profiting by this circumstance, extended an invitation to every Freshman in College, and received affirmative answers from, and initiated all but one. The foundation for a Library was now laid, and the Society became one of considerable interest and importance,—its numbers exceeding those of the Peucinian. But this supremacy was not long to be maintained. The Peucinian, determined not to be outstripped in zeal or perseverance by its younger competitor, amended its Constitution so that members might be admitted from the Freshmen class: commenced the collection of a Library of its own: established the custom of Annual Meetings at Commencement time; and in various other ways increased the number of objects and the usefulness of the association. The novelty attendant on the formation of the Athenæan soon wearing off, the current of feeling underwent a change, and for more than a year the Society had but a languishing existence: the Library was but slightly increased: little interest was manifested in the meetings, which became less and less frequent; and, at length, in 1811, the Society was discontinued,—most of the books which had been collected being distributed among the members.

But, after an interval of something more than a year and a half, it was revived, in the Summer term of 1813. The old Seal and Book of Records were obtained from some of the former members; the accumulation of a new Library was commenced, and the Society seemed re-established upon a firmer foundation than before. But soon contention for new members arose; and as the earlier origin and uninterrupted prosperity of the Peucinian were thought to confer upon it a greater degree of respectability, most, if not all of those who declined the invitation of the Athenæan, did so with the hope of being admitted to that;—though they were ineligible until their Sophomore year.* Some of these were promised the honor, and in due time received it: others, finding their talents not duly appreciated, or their claims not properly regarded, turned back, and were then willing to join the Athenæan; but finding that they were not wanted there, fell between the two. On account of the small number of members, the Society did not flourish, and on the exit of the Senior Class of 1816, it was a second time disbanded, and the Library, amounting to about two hundred volumes, divided.

During the next year the Peucinian Society remained in undisputed and quiet possession of the whole College arena. At the end of that time another and a successful effort was made for the resuscitation of the Athenæan. The first meeting was held December 10th, four individuals being present. The Constitution which had been in use from 1813 to 1816 was adopted by the Society, and a Committee appointed to "revise and correct" it. The Officers at this time elected were a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Librarian. At the next meeting, on the 12th of the same month, the Constitution, as amended by the Committee appointed for that purpose, was reported and accepted. In the book containing it, on a page preceding the Title-page, the following entry was made :

"Be it known, that it is not the object of this Society to interfere with any Society in College; that it is formed for private and social intercourse; for forensic and extemporary disputation; and for literary and scientific improvement. It shall, at all proper times, liberally extend its privileges and advantages to all worthy students in their Freshman years, that they may thus bring into early use their mental faculties, and fit and prepare themselves to discharge higher and more important duties in life.

By order of the Society,

G. J. GROSVENOR, Secretary."

* The Peucinian Constitution had previously—Oct. 25th, 1811—been restored to its original reading, by which membership was restricted to the three upper classes. But in 1826 it was again changed, and members were again admitted from the Freshman class as at present.

By the provisions of the Constitution, any student in College, of good moral character, was eligible by the vote of two-thirds of the members, and liable to expulsion by the vote of four-fifths, if he should "conduct contrary to the interests of the Society."

Members of the Senior Class, after the annual election of officers,—which was on the last Wednesday of June,—were considered Honorary, and exempted from their usual duties. Any literary gentleman might be admitted an Honorary member, who, in the opinion of three-fourths of the Society, would increase its respectability and usefulness.

By another article of the Constitution it was said that a Public Oration and Poem might be pronounced, "if practicable, by Honorary members, on the day previous to Commencement."

The Anniversary of the Society was to be held on the 15th of November, when an Address was to be delivered by the President, and, if possible, a Poem, "by some Honorary or resident member."

The first intimation to be gathered from the records relative to what is now called the General Society, in contradistinction to the Acting or College Society, occurs in the record of a meeting held on the 29th of August, 1818; when it was "Voted, That a General Meeting of the Society, Honorary and Acting members, be held on the day previous to Commencement, for the purpose of adopting measures relative to the property of the Society." This meeting was held September 2d; when, according to the record of that date, duly signed by the Secretary of the Acting Society, it was "Voted unanimously, many Honorary members being present, that Levi Stowell, an Honorary member, be President of the Society,"—"whose duty it is to preside over the same on such public occasions as require a general attendance of the Honorary members;"—and "that Charles R. Porter be the Corresponding Secretary,"—"whose duty it is to make all necessary communications, in the name of the Society, relative to its proceedings." A vote was also passed that the Library should not be distributed, in any case whatever, but with the consent of three-fourths of the Honorary members.

The Society, at this period, in their strong and ardent desire to increase their numbers, determined that there would be no impropriety, after exacting a promise of secrecy, in reading to those whom they had invited to join them, such provisions of the Constitution as were most important in order to induce them to become members. This novel method of procedure was adopted November 5th, 1818, and three individuals were thus introduced, of whom one only chose to join; and he was initiated the same evening. The other two required a few days for consideration. One of them afterwards became a member, being initiated November 9th, 1821, "after three years of deep consideration of the matter," to quote the language of that date.

In March, 1820, the increasing numbers, flourishing condition, and flattering prospects of the Society, seemed to demand some modifications in the Constitution, better to adapt it to existing circumstances. A Committee was accordingly raised, empowered to make such alterations as they should deem necessary or expedient. Their report was presented and accepted April 7th.

The number of volumes in the Library, at this time, exceeded five hundred ; but the selection of books had not been marked by the good taste and discrimination which has prevailed in later times. Indeed, the means and resources of the Society, at this early period in its history, did not admit of the purchase of expensive publications ; and the increase and value of the Library depended almost entirely on the voluntary subscriptions and donations of those individual members, who could best afford them.

At the annual election in June, the Society for the first time choose a Standing Committee, styled, in the quaint language of the Records, a "Standing Committee of Arrangements."

The appointment of an Orator for the meeting on Commencement week, was this year assumed by the Acting members. No mention was made in the Records of the College Society, of any public performances on this occasion ; but in the first record of the proceedings of the General Society, is the following entry : "The Honorary and Active members, constituting the General Society, met at No. 6, on Tuesday, the day preceding Commencement, and proceeded thence to the Meeting House," where "an Oration was delivered by Levi Stowell, Esq., and a Poem by Daniel Clarke."*

The General Society now began to act as a distinct body : choosing officers of its own : keeping a record of its proceedings separate from the Acting Society ; and assuming the election of Honorary members, and the appointment of Orator and Poet for the Annual Meetings on Commencement week. A few provisional regulations were at first adopted ; and at the meeting in September, 1821, a Constitution was reported and accepted, in which the relative powers and duties of the General Society were distinctly defined. In this instrument it was provided that the General Society should consist of Acting members, or Undergraduates, and of Honorary members,—meaning, by this term, Graduates and "such other literary gentlemen" as should "from time to time be elected." The Officers specified were a President, Vice-President, Recording Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, Treasurer, and Standing Committee. These were all to be chosen from among the Honorary Members. The Acting Society was to be under the control of the General Society, only so far as that the Constitution and laws of the former should contain nothing repugnant to those of the latter; and while the latter retained the right to control the Library, its immediate management was submitted to the former.

On the 4th of March, 1822, Maine Hall was destroyed by fire, and the Library of the Society, which was in it, sustained considerable injury. This event was most mournfully described by the Secretary of the College Society, who, in the sorrow of his heart, recorded that "Bowdoin College was consumed by fire."

At the annual meeting in 1825, the General Society passed the following resolution: "Voted, That the Library of the Athenæan Society in Bowdoin College be, and the same hereby is given to the President and Trustees of Bowdoin College, in trust, for the use of said Society in College, reserving to said Society the power of withdrawing said trust;—the said Library still to continue to be regulated and used according to the By-Laws of the Society."

At the session of the Legislature in 1828, the Society obtained an Act of Incorporation, in consequence of which the foregoing trust was withdrawn. By this Act of incorporation the Society were at liberty "to hold and possess any estate, real or personal, to an amount not exceeding five thousand dollars over and above the value of their books." At the annual meeting in September of the same year, the Constitution was entirely remodeled. The office of Vice-President was abolished, and the offices of Recording and of Corresponding Secretary were united in that of Secretary. At the same time a Diploma and Seal were adopted, in conformity to a requirement of the new Constitution.*

In 1830 a Catalogue of the Library was published by the Acting members. The whole number of volumes, at this time belonging to the Society, was two thousand, two hundred and thirty-eight.

The spirit of rivalry, and a mutual feeling of jealousy, which had always been more or less operative in the Athenæan and Peucinian Acting

* The Diploma was as follows:

"ATHENÆAN SOCIETY

OF

BOWDOIN COLLEGE.

"This certifies that _____ has been duly elected an Honorary Member of the ATHENÆAN Society of Bowdoin College, incorporated February, A. D. 1828.

In testimony whereof, we have hereunto subscribed our names, and affixed
L. S. the seal of said Society, this _____ day of _____ A. D. _____.
_____, President.

_____, Secretary."

On the Seal was engraven a head of Minerva, with the inscription: "Athenæan Society, B. C., Cul. Su. Sci. Cor."

Societies, leading, occasionally, to the adoption of injudicious measures, had, about this period, increased to such a degree as to attract the attention of the Trustees and Overseers of the College. Accordingly at their annual meeting in 1831, a Committee was deputed to inquire into the relations subsisting between them; and, if they should deem it advisable, to recommend such measures as they should judge would prove "most conducive to the harmony of the students and the best interests of the College." This Committee, as instructed, reported at the meeting in September, 1833, that on the preceding October "they visited the town, and had a personal interview with all four of the classes in a body; and the next day with Committeees of the Peucinian and Athenæan Societies." The Committee stated, furthermore, that they used all such arguments, as they deemed proper, of a persuasive and conciliatory character, to induce them to lay aside all party feelings and cultivate harmony and friendship. They urged them to unite the Societies, as the most certain mode of effecting the desired object; or to unite their Libraries, either as to property or possession; or to make no further additions to either Society, by the election of new members,—and thus permit them to become extinct in College,—and, so far as Undergraduates were concerned, in September, 1835. But the Committee were "notified formally, that none of these propositions were acceptable." Upon the presentation of this report, the Board of Trustees voted to petition the next Legislature to repeal the Act incorporating the Athenæan Society.* This was done with a view to the abolition of both associations; but the Overseers non-concurred in the measure, and no further action was taken by the other Board.

The next year the literary exercises were varied and made more interesting by the establishment of a "Paper," composed of original and anonymous articles, and conducted by three Editors.

On the 17th of February, 1836, the Athenæan received a heavy blow in the almost total destruction of its valuable Library by the second conflagration of Maine Hall. This third collection "had been obtained," in the language of the Records, "amidst opposition and discouragement, by the indefatigable efforts, perseverance and liberality of friends, till it had become, for miscellaneous reading, one of the best libraries of the size to be found in the country." The number of volumes, at the time of the fire, was three thousand, three hundred and twenty-one; of these only two hundred and twenty were saved. The most strenuous exertions were at once put forth by both members and friends of the Society to repair the loss; and it may be mentioned, as an instance of the zeal and liberality thus excited, that more than two hundred dollars' worth of books was subscribed, at one time, by the Senior and Junior members. In August, 1838, the Library had so increased, that the Standing Committee of the Acting Society were authorized to publish a Catalogue of the books contained in it. By this Catalogue it appears that the number of volumes which had been collected since the fire, was one thousand eight hundred and thirty; the whole number, including those which were saved of the former Library, being two thousand and fifty. At the same time a Catalogue of the Officers and Members of the Society was issued by the Standing Committee of the General Society, in which the whole number connected with the association, up to the time of publication, was enumerated at four hundred and sixteen; but there were unavoidably many inaccuracies in this first edition.

Previously to 1840, the Anniversary of the College Society had occurred in the Fall Term. This year, however, it took place in February instead of the preceding November, and has always since been celebrated in the Spring.

In March of the following year, a Committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Reading Room, and, if they should deem it advisable, "to make necessary arrangements therefor." The Committee reported favorably, and a Reading Room was accordingly established, under the immediate management of three Directors. A voluntary subscription of twenty-eight newspapers and periodicals, valued at about ninety-five dollars, was at once obtained, and for more than a year the Reading Room proved a benefit and source of convenience to the members; but in 1842 the affairs of the Society rendered it necessary that it should be discontinued, which was done by a formal vote passed on the 8th of March.

In the Spring Term of 1846, a "Badge Pin," bearing a head of Minerva embossed on cameo, as reported by a Committee appointed for the purpose, was adopted by the Society.

In the Summer Term of 1847, the Constitution, which had become exceedingly irregular and confused, underwent a thorough revision by a Committee of six, appointed July 15th.

In 1850, a proposal was made by the Caluvian Society to present the Athenæan with its Cabinet and other property. After some consideration, the proposal was accepted, and the transfer accordingly made.

At the annual meeting of the General Society, in September of the same year, an arrangement was entered into, by which the Athenæan and Peucinian Societies would, in future, unite in their annual celebrations at Commencement time,—each Society to furnish an Orator and each a Poet on alternate years.

In July, 1852, the Acting Society again revised its Constitution : among other amendments, changing the date of the Society's establishment : abolishing the affirmation of secrecy which had hitherto been required ; and increasing the number of officers, by providing for the annual election of two Auditors and a Cabinet-keeper.

Such is a brief sketch of the prominent events in the history of the Athenæan Society. Without dwelling upon the reverses, which it has encountered, or the days of difficulty and depression, which it has seen, it is enough to say, that it has surmounted every obstacle, and grown with the growth and strengthened with the strength of the College. Neither is it necessary to enlarge upon the important and continued agency of the association in educating the minds and forming the characters of its members ; that agency is attested and demonstrated by the names that cluster in its Catalogue.
